Garden Party

A comedy about gardeners both casual and crazed

Winter, summer, spring or fall, a garden party always sounds like something fresh and fun.

That's just what TAPIT/new works delivers with its colorful, zesty and yes, down to earth, production, "Garden Party."

Combining comedy, music, tap dance and garden slides, "Garden Party" celebrates gardeners both casual and crazed. In linked vignettes showcasing waging garden gnomes, battling plants, mustard researchers and a meeting of Gardener's Anonymous, this cabaret-style production explores the comic possibilities of America's favorite hobby.

The women behind this production give a whole new meaning to the phrase "garden ladies." Director Carlyne Haycraft deftly weaves together Danielle Dresden's script, Barbara Chusid's original score, Donna Peckett's tap dance and slides of Jeannette Golden's country gardens in Black Earth, Wisconsin, to create a show as fun-filled and colorful as a summer evening. Costumes are by Terri Lynn Alexander, and sets by Mary Beth Gaffney transform the stage into the Teeming Sanctuary Garden Store.

Peckett and Dresden, TAPIT/new works' producing artistic directors, take on all 13 roles in "Garden Party." As the garden gnomes, Xylem and Phloem, Peckett and Dresden debate whether gardening is good or bad for people, assuming the characters of gardeners and plants to advance their arguments.

Audiences are also treated to a tap dance recipe for rhubarb nut bread.

"Garden Party" can't make summer last forever, but it certainly leaves audiences with a warm feeling inside.

What They've Said
